But by the time you get to the harrowing final page, it'll all make sense. Victor Hugo writes as if he never did anything else but write. In France, in old times, there was no exception to this rule, except in the case of glass manufacturers. Sometimes he desires to go to it. A curious thing is that Hugo is quite detached, even cerebral in his approach given to philosophising and generalising about life, fate and zoology gorillas, I learnt, are like tigers view spoiler [ either because of their stripes or their well known propensity for engaging in life and death struggles with naked men hide spoiler ]. Sublime and supreme, this is the ultimate tale of man against the world. Of the three Victor Hugo novels most readily available in the U.
