There was no distinction between the king's personal servants and the public officials. Charlemagne's efforts to improve the THE HISTORY OF CHARLEMAGNE government and the religious establishment posed the need for better-educated secular and religious officials. Alcuin writes hopefully in his letters of an Imperium Christianum "Christian Empire"wherein, "just as the inhabitants of the [Roman Empire] had been united by a common Roman citizenship", presumably this new empire would be united by a common Christian faith.
