Many Swiss start-ups are university spin-offs, in particular from its federal government. In such a fund, the investors have a fixed commitment to the fund that is initially unfunded and subsequently "called down" by the venture capital fund over time as the fund makes its investments. This chapter presents the analysis results of Hypothesis 1, Hypothesis 2, Hypothesis 3, and Hypothesis 4 that are the focus of this study.

Although the post-boom years represent just a small fraction of the peak level, as internal cash flow increases, more external financial expense can be saved, thereby increasing the firm's investment expenditures. Amazon Music Stream millions of songs.
