In a group with poor group dynamics, people's behavior disrupts work. On the contrary, like the simple rudiments of blocking and tackling, they are common sense principles of human relationships widely known by successful sales professionals in all fields. Many of the behaviors that lead to poor dynamics can be overcome if you catch them early. As with so many issues, the leader must walk a fine line and keep a delicate balance. So, break it up into chunks. You have high hopes for the group, so you feel frustrated when people can't come to a decision. Actions associated with success in the people management consideration domain include communicating effectively, listening, providing support and encouragement, recognizing and rewarding success, and building and maintaining trust. Teams that lack focus or direction can quickly develop poor dynamics, as people and accurate sources of feedback are necessary to narrow the gaps and enable appropriate self-management strategies.
