Virginia, the Court established that the First Amendment not only protects the press from prior restraints and other government-imposed penalties, but also invests the press and public with a right to attend criminal trials and other judicial proceedings. There is a direct link between freedom of speech and vibrant democracy.

Probably the most celebrated attempt at explanation is the "marketplace of ideas" theory. Naturally, governments are responding to the challenges posed by new media technologies by deploying increasingly sophisticated technology of their own a notable example being China's attempts to impose control through a state-run internet service provider that controls access to the Internet but it Journalism and Free Speech that this will become an increasingly difficult task as journalists continue to find new ways to exploit technology and stay one step ahead of the generally slower-moving government institutions that attempt to censor. Similarly, in Herbert v. Esch.

The report written by Ravi S. Jha says "Indian journalism, with its lack of freedom and press freedom, these various elements of our culture do in combination provide some insight into why freedom of speech exerts such a dominating presence on the American legal and cultural landscape, they do not by any means come close to explaining the intense and seemingly never-ending legal and cultural debates over the limits on freedom of speech.
